The main purpose of the Department of Turkish Language and Literature is to provide the basic information required to train academicians and researchers who will work in this field, and the necessary field information for those who want to be teachers in secondary schools.

The mission of the Department of Turkish Language and Literature is to train Turcologists who have extensive knowledge of the Turkish language, literature, culture and civilization, who know their own culture and civilization, who are linguistically conscious, who are open to the universal, who can think multi-dimensionally, who have a working discipline and who are researching.

The vision of the Department of Turkish Language and Literature is that it sees Turkish language and literature as a field of study that reflects the society, besides, it determines the place of Turkish culture in the globalizing world and makes it come to the forefront, produces knowledge, brings history together with the present in an academic sense, and examines the social development process. It aims to be a department that can benefit from all social sciences and resources in order to fulfill its mission in terms of literature and language.

Advantages of the Department of Turkish Language and Literature, by teaching Ottoman Turkish at a good level, it is ensured that the student can read and write texts with old letters comfortably. Students graduating from this department learn the morphological, phonological, syntactic and semantic features of the Turkish language. They know very well all the phases of the language, the values of Turkish culture and civilization, and the history of Turkish literature. Knowing how important sub-disciplines such as sociology, psychology, philosophy, history and political science are in the analysis of literary texts, they gain the habit of reading versatily.
